

The bear looked out of the window of his home at all of the trees and other beautiful things in his small garden. "Oh I am a very lucky bear to have all of these great things. I feel like a king." He said to the fox, who was standing next to him having a glass of water before they went back outside to play. They finished their drinks at last and each of them put on their coats.

When they went back into the garden, the fox called over to the bear, "Would you like to see any magic next?" The bear could not believe his ears. "That's something I've always wanted to see live because it looks fun, but how will you do it?" he asked. The fox thought for a moment and then said, "That's a good question. To make it more exciting, we must find lots of people. Let's ask everyone we know to come over."
